Tip of the Month

Ear infection in a dog can be an unhealthy and uncomfortable situation for your pet, not to mention the cost of visiting your vet and buying remedies such as ear drops and antibiotics. You can make your own thorough examination right at home! Here's what to check for:

- The ears must be smooth, odourless and shiny. On the inside there must be a little hair and a pale pink color skin.
- When examining, use your smell as much as your sight. If they smell, there could be the risk of an infection. If the issue on the inside presents a strong pink or red tone, or if you observe a black, yellow, green or red stain or also the presence of pus there could also be an infection. If there is accumulation of earwax, probably a good cleaning will suffice.
- Over more than trapping dust, the ears also attract parasites, as ticks and the acarus. This can barely be seen, but they form a greyish crust.
- Even if you don't see anything, if your dog scratches, inclines or shakes his head often, it might be that he/she is suffering from ears problems. Also observe if its ears are softer than usual, if he seems dizzy or if he can't keep his/her head up straight. These are signs that your pet may be experiencing symptoms of a serious infection, for which you must go to the veterinarian.

Did You Know?

Pet feces must be handled carefully due to diseases and parasites. Parasites from pet waste can live in the ground for up to a year, be difficult to kill and cause severe harm to human and pet health. Minimizing that risk will help protect your surrounding environment.

Some benefits of having a pet waste clean-up service:

- Helps protect your environment
- Minimizes odors and flies
- Prevents lawn damage
- Increases property value
